AIDING WOMEN WAR SUFFERERS

England Trying to Care for Wives and "Unmarried Wives" of Soldiers.

CRANKS ANNOY OFFICIALS

Offer Countless Plans and Suggestions for Bringing Hostilities to an End.

London, July 10.—London, while it grinds on in its slow way in the effort to gain recruits enough to complete its armies, is facing another and a much more serious proposition in making provision for the women who have been left to the tender mercies of the state as a result of the war. Wives of soldiers—married, widowed, "unmarried wives"—and soldier's children have to be taken care of. The effort of all organized charity now is directed to this end and to the end that the unmarried woman be afforded, as near as possible, the same opportunity that is given their more fortunate sisters.

While it is a fact that the "war baby" publicity which has spread all over the world was not justified by the facts, the truth remains that many girls and women have been left at home to fight a social battle while their men are at the front.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is taking an active interest in these women. In a meeting where 500 delegates from all parts of the kingdom were called upon to confer upon this problem he stated:

"There is a binding obligation on every one of us to attend to the welfare of the unmarried as well as the married wives of our soldiers. Because the fathers have gone away, or because the mothers have failed to sanction their union through the church is no reason why the child should not have help and attention in his upbringing."

This, of course, expresses the attitude of the Anglican church toward the "war baby," and it is a popular one. Countess Ferrers has paved the way for the recognition of the rights of the "unmarried wives" by the organized charitable associations of London and is leading in the work of providing for the coming of these children whose fathers will, in many instances, never return from the battlefields of France and the Flandres.

Trying to Provide Work.

In the main the efforts of such women as the Countess Ferrers are directed toward providing work for the mothers and prospective mothers which will enable them to provide for themselves rather than depend entirely upon charity. This movement has a twofold purpose. In the first place, it is accepted that that home training is better than institutional upbringing. And, in the second place, it is hoped thus to hold the mother to a purpose which will result in her being a credit to the country.

Since the war has started most of the regulations regarding the liquor traffic have been forced onto the statute books by the conduct of women rather than of men. It seems to be the first thought of the woman in trouble to get to the nearest "pub" and there try to stifle the fire of circumstances in "ale" or "beer."

No rules have been laid down for the treatment of these cases, it being, according to the Archbishop of Canterbury, far easier to do the right thing by judging each applicant for aid on her own merits.

The National Political League and Council is preparing to find work for many of these women, as well as for other widows of the war, and to this end an exhibition will be held late in June at the home of Lady Cowdray, who is intensely interested in others who are suffering from the war.

Countess Brassey, the Marchioness of Londonderry, Lady Isabel Marjesson, and the Right Hon. Henry Chaplin, M. P., are fostering this sentiment.

Opportunity for women to replace men in all the industries will be sought by this council and arrangements will be made for their tuition in the lines they choose to follow.

Cranky at War Office.

Downing street and the war office have a daily battle with the army of cranks that is at present besieging London with countless plans to end the war. It is not unusual for a man to rush up to an attention and demand that these plans be carried out. Lord Kitchener or the Prime Minister. His business always is to end the war. One of the full-time individuals had a plan whereby he was to make the twenty-five German states fall out and proceed to tear each other to pieces while England and France stood by and watched. Another had prepared a substance which, if it were used to paint the hull of a warship, would deflect any of the enemy's shells or torpedoes which might be directed at the ship.

When the American at home or here in London boasts that his mail "always comes through without any interference from the censors" and glibly contends that the majority of mail matter passing out of Great Britain is not read he knows not whereof he speaks. The fact that he produces sealed envelopes to show that he is right is simply a tribute to the art with which the censors here work.

Ordinarily it is easy to open a letter by steaming it. If this is impossible there are many other methods in use. Some of them have been known for decades, but the exigencies of war have mothered new methods here which are kept secret, but which are easily England to know what is being written without any suspicion on the part of the average correspondent.

With the war the farthing has come back into its own as a coin of daily circulation. High prices have caused a more minute consideration of value and a shaving of profits by many of the merchants, with the result that the quarter penny (half cent), is made to do active service.

With milk at eight pence a penny a quart, that is 9 cents in American money, it would be the natural procedure of a New York storekeeper to charge 5 cents for a pint. But your English housewife will have none of this. So when the penny was added to the price of milk the purchaser of milk by the pint provided herself with a supply of farthings.
